Course Description

As a rising power, India is at a critical crossroad of change and transformation which makes Foreign Policy an increasingly important segment of public policy in India. India's young generation need thought leadership, skill set, tools and expansion of their knowledge base to analyze the country's growth trajectory, understand the nuances of diplomacy and policy making. This course looks at the evolution of India's Foreign Policy (IFP) thinking to understand the decisions India takes in multilateral, plurilateral and bilateral forums. It provides an analytical understanding of the political, security, economic, and development dimensions of India's journey in the international arena. It addresses critical gaps in understanding Indian foreign policy formulation and decision-making processes, deriving lessons from Indian strategic thought and practice, that continue to assist India in the changing global order.

The course provides an in-depth understanding of the nuances of India's foreign policy making, the structures and processes, interests of various parties and stakeholders, and the external and internal determinants of the foreign policy making. The course provides an overview of India's neighborhood policy and examines the role of different actors in policy making, which influences policy making dynamics. It explores India's interaction with global and regional organizations, the state's current role and its future possibilities. More importantly, the course explores the way the world looks at India and the way India envisions the world. In sum, the course provides the basis for understanding Indian foreign policy that will be useful to a public policy professional to make change at a global and national level.
